42 points		matches	current baseline

Newcastle's season has been a slow unravelling since selling Alexander Isak to Liverpool for £125m — the goal threat has visibly dried up and the defensive fragility Eddie Howe acknowledged earlier this season hasn't been fixed. Bruno Guimarães's hamstring injury has ripped the midfield engine out at the worst possible time, and a run of form that saw them 19th in the form table tells you everything about momentum. They sit four points off the European places with seven games left, but the fixture list opens with Arsenal away — a side that's run away with the league — before three winnable but far from easy games against Fulham, Crystal Palace, and Brighton.

THE OPTIMAL PATH

In the best-case scenario, Top-7 odds rise to ~59%. But the probability of all those results landing together is
